ABOUT THE ISLAND

Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi, a member of The Texas A&M University System, has been a higher education leader in its 60-year history. Today the Island University provides bachelor's, master's and doctoral programs to more than 9,100 students.

With palm trees lining pathways throughout the 240-acre campus, the nearby natural wetlands, and a beachfrontage, Texas A&M-Corpus Christi becomes a first-choice destination for many. Our attitude stays young because we are able to adapt quickly to new technologies and engage new energies.

Corpus Christi and the Coastal Bend are vacation destinations. With more than 300,000 people throughout the region, the area provides both the amenities of a major city and the intimacy of comfortable neighborhoods. Students enjoy the many festivals held in a vibrant downtown, the breathtaking waterfront, numerous concerts, cultural activities and professional sports.

Why Pursue a Master's in Communication?

Applied Research Track

Application is made to the thesis track. All students will enroll in the Master of Science in Communication Studies Program. The program curriculum is designed to provide students with a broad knowledge base in communication theory, research methods, and advanced research skills.

Thesis Track

Graduate students will develop a thesis topic and conduct original research in a discipline-specific area. The thesis provides an opportunity for students to apply their knowledge and skills in a focused, self-directed study. The thesis track requires 30 credit hours, and students must complete a comprehensive examination prior to graduation.
